The Richard Scase Music Fund

‘I enjoy all kinds of music – classical, opera, world – but have a particular penchant for Sinatra-style and Big Band. I am keen for young musicians and their audiences to learn and appreciate the heritage of all music forms and discover where their own passion lies. Supporting the talents of young musicians at Kent is a great way to achieve this aim.’

The University of Kent has an important role as a custodian of our students’ talent. In particular, the University recognises the role that music plays in the development of the individual. Music performance enables students to gain in confidence in challenging circumstances. Scholars learn to overcome their nerves and become inspired to perform at the very peak of their ability on the night. Involvement in musical performances changes students’ lives, giving them a unique self-confidence in what they can achieve individually and with others. Few other types of university teaching prepare students so well to perform under pressure, a skill that will stand them in good stead for their working lives. It gives them the creative and self-confident skills to be entrepreneurs as well as business and community leaders. The Richard Scase Music Fund supports students in a wide range of musical activities – providing music lessons, workshops, buying instruments and taking them on tours – and with a special interest in preserving the heritage of Big Band music.
